Amber Allman, NRECA vice president of advocacy, press and member communications Explaining rates and affordability to members may not be easy, but it’s essential. That’s especially true today as costs rise and tough conversations ensue. This session introduces key findings from a new lexicon project designed to help make messaging about rates and affordability clearer and more consistent to build trust and reinforce transparency. Walk away with real-world examples and communication strategies you can apply at your cooperative.

Kennedy DeLap, Miss North Dakota 2025 and North Dakota Living photojournalist
- Behind her camera, Kennedy DeLap fell back in love with North Dakota, its people and quiet communities. In August 2024, DeLap joined the NDAREC team, crisscrossing the state on photo and story assignments for North Dakota Living, all while learning about cooperatives and rural communities – and finding her passion for service. DeLap shares how working for the state’s electric cooperatives positioned her for the crown and puts her storytelling skills to work as Miss North Dakota 2025 – inspiring others to discover their passions and use them to make their communities better.

- 9:30 a.m. Rural Living in 2026
Ben Winchester, rural sociologist, University of Minnesota Extension, Department of Community Development
There appears to be a renewed interest in people moving to smaller rural communities in response to the pandemic of 2020. What isn’t well known is this trend – the “Brain Gain” – has been happening for the past five decades. People ages 30 to 60 moving to rural places has been documented since the 1970s, reinvigorating small-town demographics and social and economic life. These trends paint a complex picture of how our communities are changing and challenging traditional boundaries.

10:30 a.m. To Boldly Go: Stepping Out from Ordinary to Extraordinary

Ray McElroy, former NFL football player, professional speaker and founder of Ray of Hope on Earth

What separates those who experience success from those who constantly find themselves falling short? How do individuals and organizations "boldly go" where they have never been before? McElroy's message will focus on how ordinary people with average talent accomplish extraordinary things. He'll also address perceived reality, the effects of negative self-talk, and offer inspiration for individuals and organizations to create momentum toward greatness!
